The search for a decanter which would highlight the color of the cognac and preserve its aroma, led to a flask that was discovered near Cognac on the site where the battle of Jarnac took place in 1569. The reproduction of this decanter, which owed its origins to the master glassblowers of Venice, was an inspired choice. Its rounded shape highlighted by royal signatures in form of fleurs-de-lys, at the very depths of the crystal, gives it a unique appearance. The Renaissance style, so popular in the former royal courts of Europe, has once again been resurrected in the Louis XIII Baccarat crystal decanter.
